238 MAIN STREET is a two storey brick house five bays in length, facing the street to the east. The earliest section of this house is the southerly two bays but the entire facade is of Flemish bond. An unbroken vertical joint marks the division between the two sections. Unbonded jack arches are above each opening and the cornice over the entire facade is of corbeled brick. Other walls are of common bond, every sixth course headers. Windows are 6/6 except those of the original structure's first storey which are 8/8. Neither window in the earliest section was a door, suggesting that the very small earliest remaining section was actually an addition to an even earlier house. All windows have narrow beaded frames and louvred blinds. Flush end chimneys rise above each gable end, the southerly with one flue, the northerly with two.

The earliest section of the dwelling measures approximately 16 by 18 feet and it probably dates from the 1820's; the north addition occurred very shortly after the initial construction.

A lower two-storey, brick, gable-roof kitchen wing extends behind the north end and a one storey shed-roofed porch along its south side is now enclosed.

A center hall extends through the middle bay, immediately north of the earliest section and the stair rises to the second floor with a high intermediate landing. Most of the original details remain throughout, including the plain beaded trim, the doors with six partially-raised panels and the northerly mantels which have plain pilasters supporting a plain frieze. The mantel of the southerly room is removed and the fireplace is closed; the second storey southerly room has never had a fireplace. In that room's floor, along the north wall, is a patch suggesting the location of a stair.

In the kitchen is a large fireplace fitted with a crane; an enclosed winding back stair is to its north.

The attic is accessible by a fixed diagonal enclosed ladder above the staircase; its treads are rebated into its stringers and beaded boards are applied to its soffit to close it from below. Rafters are covered with modern sheet material. Flooring is all fastened with cut nails. The brick wall in the attic stairway (the original exterior north wall) is unpainted.

A cellar extends only beneath the south room and the first floor joists there are modern but the original log joists remain to the north above the unexcavated area.

Immediately west of the kitchen wing is a brick smoke house with a corbeled brick cornice. Its log rafters are mortised and tenoned at the ridge and numerous wrought iron hooks remain as do the blackened surfaces and aroma indicating its former use.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This is an early nineteenth century brick house with an early addition bringing it to its present moderate size. The extremely small size of the oldest section and the absence of a front doorway therein, suggests that it was an addition to an even earlier house which was replaced by the present hall and north room. The use of Flemish bond on its street facade indicates a degree of sophistication. The early brick smoke house is indicative of the many outbuildings which were once required to support rural village life.

The house stands on land once owned by John Reister, Sr. and was part of the Brotherly Love and Reister's Desire tracts. His youngest daughter Mary was deeded a small house and lot south of the Inn at the corner of Church Street in 1781(WG No.G, 1781-82: 101-02) Shortly she married John Beckley, a skilled blacksmith in 1783. He apparently took over operation of the blacksmith shop established by his father-in-law prior to 1775 near Cockeys Mill Road. Eventually the Beckleys were deeded more land and another house on the corner of Cockeys Mill and the turnpike in 1786 and moved there.(WG No.2, 1786-87:369-70)(Marks, op.cit.,p.65)

The Federal Assessment of 1798 lists a property on the site: No.3323. Owner, John Beckley, Occupant, Christian Weaver. Part of Phillip's Desire (re-survey of Reister's Desire in 1773). One hew'd Log Dwelling House one Storey, 24x16. Brick Smith Shop one Storey, 24x18. Hew'd Log Stable, one Storey, 20x18. One exemption, $50.00 60 perches. Valuation $61.25.

(Dr. Dickson in his account says that Christian Weaver was a tailor. Dickson, op. cit. p.6)

John died in 1806 and Mary in 1813. The property was passed to the children. There were six. In 1827, 5 of the children conveyed their interests in the property to their unmarried sister Juliett(WG 185/410-411) It is she, possibly, who added a brick wing to the log house and eventually the present front hall and north room. She died in 1854, so that the property reverted back to her brothers and sisters.

The heirs sold the property, then, to John Beckley, Jr. and their sister Dorothy Gore (54 $\frac{1}{2}$ to the north went to John; 44 $\frac{1}{2}$ to the south went to Dorothy(HMF 11/332 & 336)

Both John and Dorothy apparently were active in the affairs of the Methodist church. John in 1848 was named in the will of John Sumwalt as a trustee of the "Preacher's House"(Methodist Parsonage). In 1868, he sold his sister, Dorothy, his portion of the lot nr Church Street.(EHA 60/232) She in turn, deeded part of the lot (wt House) to the Methodist Church as a new building site, naming John a trustee, (EHA 61/91). She died in 1869.(Marks op. cit. p.67) The house and lot was leased by her heirs to Albert L. Whiting whose name appears on the property in the 1877 Atlas. Whiting was a merchant in town.

Finally, in 1879, the lot was purchased by Rebecca J. Stocksdale(JB 98/543 & 112/96-7) who apparently rented it out. It was reportedly rented for many years by Henry DeMoss who farmed the acreage. Miss Jane Stocksdale held the property until her death(she lived next door in #234). Her estate was willed to her heirs. In 1942, Henry M. Whalen sold the property to George Beltz(CHK 1236/363)

George and Mary Beltz deeded the property to Paul Wixon in 1945(RJS 1422/377)

The Wixons sold to Charles and Susannah Baldwin in 1952(GLB 2184/440)

The Baldwins deeded the property to the present owners in 1956.(GLB 2918/490)
